Admissions requirements

There are standard minimum entry requirements for all undergraduate courses. Students are advised to check the standard requirements for the most up-to-date information. For most courses a decision will be made on the basis of your application form alone. However, for some courses the selection process may include an interview to demonstrate your strengths in addition to any formal entry requirements. More information can be found here: <https://www.westminster.ac.uk/study/undergraduate/how-to-apply>

Recognition of Prior Learning

Applicants with prior certificated or experiential learning at the same level of the qualification for which they wish to apply are advised to visit the following page for further information:

Aims of the programme

On the BA Politics, you will develop a rich understanding of political ideas, institutions and governance practices in all their complex forms and manifestations. The course is designed to balance practical application with theoretical understanding. Our aim is to develop informed, confident graduates with the capacity to critically engage with and evaluate the operation of local and global political structures.

Politics spans institutional, theoretical, and issue-based questions of power and governance, and this programme equips you to explore them in depth. The BA Politics course introduces you to the values and motivations of political actors and the institutional practices impacting decision-making in a rapidly changing world. You will explore the challenges facing states and citizens under conditions of uncertainty, developing your knowledge of processes of change and sources of crisis. From the outset, the programme engages students with the interactions between people, ideas and institutions in order to understand how political power works in practice. You will learn to recognise the different locations of political agency within and across societies, and how these are determined and limited by competing interests and historically inherited structures of power. You will study how governance works and how events are shaped by competing political ideas. The programme will empower you to tackle fundamental questions of power, justice, sustainability, conflict, diversity, accountability, sovereignty and decision-making that shape today's political world.

We have a longstanding tradition of innovative research and high-quality, research-led teaching, and this ethos underpins our BA Politics programme. Diverse and wide-ranging, the programme offers strong expertise in critical and applied political thought; governance and policy-making; democratic theory and practice; regional studies of Europe, the Middle East, Asia and Africa; humanitarianism; climate and resource politics; contested concepts and practices of ethics and sovereignty; the politics of gender and sexuality; critical International Relations theory; security studies; post-, de-, and anti- colonial politics. The boundaries of politics as a discipline are fluid and dynamic, and the programme reflects this through a systematic engagement with related fields, especially International Relations and Development studies, but also Sociology, Cultural studies, Philosophy, Geography and Political Economy.

Our teaching programme is structured to support your transition to higher education and progression through each academic year. Our first-year programme provides an introduction to key concepts and structures of government and how these impact on political behaviour and decision-making. It also embeds the study of politics in a wider context by providing a strong grounding in International Relations and Development Studies. You will study key political ideas, major modes of political practice, and different types of political institutions, developing your academic skills and capacity for independent analysis, as you begin to interpret real-world political practice. Throughout, the emphasis is on creative and critical thinking, as you apply your knowledge to challenges such as the crisis of democracy, problems of global governance, the politics of gender, labour, and migration. You will also be encouraged to reflect on the ways in which your new skills enhance your employability and will be supported to start considering the career paths available to graduates of the course.

In your second year, you will deepen and expand your understanding of key approaches to the discipline. You will learn to apply different perspectives within a wide range of option modules. You will study British Politics and gain a critical awareness of how logics of political inclusion and exclusion shape contemporary practice. You will develop knowledge and understanding of the nature and distribution of power within and between different political systems, the contexts within which these operate, and the relationships between them. You will be introduced to research methods for academic and professional purposes and will develop your employability profile by undertaking 35 hours of work-based learning.

In the final year you will draw on the knowledge, analytical capacities, and research skills you have developed to pursue a dissertation project on a topic of your choosing. You will also refine your understanding and interpretation of the practices shaping contemporary politics, focusing on governance and policy-making at a time of crisis, examining how states and institutions respond to global challenges such as climate change and public health risks, while managing sustainability, security, and diversity.

The Politics programme at the University of Westminster is strongly committed to students' personal and professional development. We aim to create competent and confident graduates with a competitive advantage in today's employment market. Graduates in Politics go on to develop careers in various sectors, including: the Civil Service; NGOs; international organisations such as the EU or UN; policy and research; teaching; and journalism.

In addition to the compulsory element of work-based learning at Level 5, you will have the opportunity to take a Professional Experience year between your second and final years. Throughout the programme, our in-built focus on skills development accompanies a rigorous academic approach to learning. Personal and professional skills are actively developed through: in-class training delivered by the learning and teaching teams and expert guests; a variety of innovative authentic assessments; departmental events and away-days; and field trips, where possible. Our central London location gives us access to sites of government, specialist resources, museums and places of interest, and we maintain excellent links to employers.

Our students join us from all over the world to explore future opportunities as well as challenges of global politics. We offer well-established international exchanges, including study abroad for a semester. Such activities are designed to broaden students' experience and improve their skills in intercultural relations and applied research, as well as to develop their personal awareness of moral questions of equality, ethics and global responsibility.

Employment and further study opportunities

University of Westminster graduates will be able to demonstrate the following five Graduate Attributes:

- Critical and creative thinkers
- Literate and effective communicator
- Entrepreneurial
- Global in outlook and engaged in communities
- Social, ethically and environmentally aware

University of Westminster courses capitalise on the benefits that London as a global city and as a major creative, intellectual and technology hub has to offer for the learning environment and experience of our students.

The BA Politics course aims to create graduates who are leaders in professional life, globally engaged and lifelong learners. A focus on careers is built-in to each level of the BA Politics, including into core modules. You will have the opportunity to further build your professional profile via a range of additional workshops, modules, and our optional Professional Experience year. We have strong ties with international partners and key employers, who provide placement opportunities and contribute to careers events.

Students who take the Professional Experience year will register for the “Politics and International Relations Professional Experience Year” module. Upon successful completion of the module you will be awarded 120 additional credits and qualify for your chosen degree “with Professional Experience”. The marks and credits of the year are not exchangeable with Westminster credits and do not count towards the final degree classification.

LEADERS IN PROFESSIONAL LIFE

Graduates in Politics will acquire knowledge, both as an academic researcher and as an individual with an informed and global outlook. This knowledge encompasses a broad and diverse range of scholarly perspectives and actively engages with the contemporary agenda. Graduates leave with a commitment to the continuation of knowledge, appreciating its intrinsic value and as a tool within professional life.

GLOBALLY ENGAGED

Studying in a diverse, creative and challenging environment allows students to leave the University of Westminster with a critical outlook. By working alongside scholars who are leaders in the field, the inclusive and dynamic research culture encourages a global outlook.

RESOURCEFUL AND ADAPTABLE

Our graduates gain the attributes of ambitious and confident thinking, enabling innovation and achievements. Leadership qualities are evident in the diversity of pathways graduates take. Self-discipline allows graduates to attain professional standing and exercise their initiative. Graduates in Politics are adaptable and are able to respond to the new challenges faced within economic, social and global political life.

International opportunities

Graduates with international experience are particularly valued by employers. Students on this course have the opportunity to spend one semester abroad in their second year or one year abroad in their third year. You may take a work or volunteering placement, both of which provide valuable opportunities to boost your employability and ground your studies in an experiential setting. You may also undertake a study placement at one of our international university partners (the exact list is subject to change). You can also undertake a combination of both study and work. A one-year period of residence abroad enhances your language skills and contributes experiences and contacts that can be valuable in your career. It also encourages intercultural awareness and capability, qualities of self-reliance and other generic skills which further enable you to become mobile and transnational citizens.

Students choosing to take the Year Abroad will register for the two ‘Global Politics Year Abroad’ modules, one in Semester 1 and one in Semester 2. Upon successful completion of these modules you will be awarded 120 additional credits and qualify for your chosen degree ‘with International Experience’. The marks and credits of the year abroad are not exchangeable with Westminster credits and do not count towards the final degree classification.

What will you be expected to achieve?

Learning outcomes are statements of what successful students have achieved as a result of learning. These are threshold statements of achievement the learning outcomes broadly fall into four categories:

- The overall knowledge and understanding you will gain from your course (KU)
- Graduate attributes are characteristics that you will have developed during the duration of your course (GA)
- Professional and personal practice learning outcomes are specific skills that you will be expected to have gained on successful completion of the course (PPP)
- Key transferable skills that you will be expected to have gained on successful completion of the course. (KTS)
- Cognitive Skills, are learning outcomes that help build a conceptual understanding that is necessary to devise and sustain arguments, and/or to solve problems and comment on research.

Level 4 course learning outcomes: upon completion of Level 4 you will be able to:

- L4.1 The ability to identify the primary characteristics of Politics as a scholarly discipline, informed by key theories and political concepts, in the context of cognate disciplines (KU)
- L4.2 Competence in identifying and distinguishing a variety of approaches to the study of Politics, which may conflict with one another (KU)

- L6.8 An ability to reflect on individual performance and respond to constructive criticism, evidenced by engagement with feedback and guidance as part of a resilient learning culture fostered throughout your degree. (PPP)

How will you learn?

Learning methods

The BA Politics programme is designed to place supported independent learning at the heart of the curriculum. Our learning environment is structured to enable students to address social, political and international issues in a way that is both relevant and creative. Our active learning sessions incorporate the transmission of 'facts' but are more concerned with learning to critically evaluate political interactions in all their manifestations. We provide a learning environment that encourages students to reflect on key concepts, issues and problems beyond the formal classroom environment. We encourage our students to 'own' the classroom and this is reflected in the fact that we have adopted a model of learning which values student-enquiry as the primary focus on all our modules.

Students taking the BA Politics programme will be encouraged to take responsibility for their academic and professional choices throughout their studies. Each undergraduate module will offer a different experience of learning, with academic staff designing the teaching activities to suit the particular learning outcomes of each subject rather than following a standardised formula. Our Learning Futures curriculum is designed to demonstrate clear progression in knowledge and understanding at each of the key stages of the BA Politics degree. By the end of their programme, Politics students will be equipped to take responsibility for their lifelong learning and future professional development.

Each module on the undergraduate programme has its own characteristic teaching and learning features that are appropriate to the particular subject matter (e.g. small group work, problem-based tutorials, review sessions, workshops, symposia, debates, Q&A sessions, document analysis sessions, structured role-plays). The School of Social Sciences seeks to encourage both staff- and peer-led activities where students learn from one another within a co-operative and intellectually exciting atmosphere. Although many of our undergraduate modules include formal lectures (including many from scholars, partners and leaders from outside the University), the emphasis throughout is on learning through interactive group work in seminars, tutorials, workshops and symposiums. Many of our modules are designed to establish authentic learning tasks and we model many of our learning activities on 'realworld' approaches.

Teaching methods

Our approach to learning and teaching enables students to develop a series of key transferable skills that will benefit them in their future professional life. Our teaching philosophy is oriented to developing student capacity to work independently as well as in groups, to enable students to make use of a full range of resources and techniques in developing graduate level skills. Students are thus encouraged to evaluate their own development and performance in a supportive and constructive learning environment. A number of innovative and distinct learning environments and experiences are offered to students on the BA Politics course, including:

Lectures: Lectures involve presentations by academic staff, policy-makers and/or external speakers. Many lectures involve an interactive and/or 'blended learning' element and we encourage students to participate fully in lectures, either by responding to questions or posing their own questions.

Seminars: Seminars are informal teaching/discussion sessions in smaller groups and involve greater interaction with the lecturer and with small peer groups. Tutorials: In a tutorial students meet with their tutor either individually or as a part of a small group. Tutorials provide an opportunity to discuss problems and issues and make informal presentations.

Workshops: Many modules will offer interactive workshops that allow students to explore a topic, theme or subject through their own knowledge and informed analysis of a problem.

Symposiums: Allow students to present an authoritative position in relation to a topic, theme or subject. Students are asked to take an active lead in planning a symposium and key transferable skills are developed (e.g. communication, time management, planning).

Reading groups: Provide students with the opportunity to respond and interact with a set text or reading. These semi-structured discussions are an excellent opportunity for students to evaluate key ideas, texts and concepts.

Role-plays and political simulations: Offer students the opportunity to apply theory to practice. Students are encouraged to explore key ideas, themes, and concepts through games and simulations.

Fieldtrips: Students may undertake fieldwork or visit relevant international organisations or research establishments, where possible, as part of their studies.

International exchanges: Students will be able to take part in international exchanges through our study abroad programme.

Internships and work placements: With an internship programme students can complete a work placement for credit.

Assessment methods

The BA Politics course offers a variety of assessment methods that aim to develop graduates who are open to critical thinking, effective at communication, independent and reasoned in professional life, and ethical in their global outlook.

By varying assessment activities, we aim to motivate students with an increasingly diverse range of experiences, learning styles and competencies. We have adopted a mixture of assessment types in an attempt to reduce over-assessment and ensure that students develop a broader range of skills for professional success than would be transferred by traditional assessment methods alone.

Our external examiners routinely comment on how successful and innovative our portfolio of course assessments are. We have developed our assessment framework to ensure that learning outcomes are 'joined up' to reflect the importance of formative and summative approaches. Our assessment strategy aims at consolidating breadth in knowledge and depth of analytical understanding, as students progress through levels 4-6 of the programme.

As a result of our unique focus on authentic assessment and on tasks which encourages reflection on students' learning process, the course is well placed to respond to the challenges and opportunities posed by Artificial Intelligence, and especially Large Language Models (LLMs). Many of our assessments replicate the challenges of practical engagement and teamwork in the workplace, or else focus on the processes of research and analysis in ways which centre students' own reflections, experiences, and critical engagement with data and sources.

Our students would typically be exposed to the following forms of assessment:

- Policy Reports
- Individual Presentations
- Group Presentations
- Debates Project Work
- Critical Reflections
- Journals and logbooks
- Dissertations □
- Professional Reports □
- Book and article reviews □
- Posters □
- Simulations/Games □
- Learning Portfolios □
- Essays

We have made a conscious effort to standardise assessment within the programme and benchmarked our assessment strategy. As a result of this, each 20-credit module will contain similar assessment expectations and students are informed of the typical time and effort expectations for completing coursework.

Course Structure

This section shows the core and option modules available as part of the course and their credit value. Full-time

Undergraduate students study 120 credits per year. Course structures can be subject to change each academic year following feedback from a variety of sources.

Modules are described as:

- Core modules are compulsory and must be undertaken by all students on the course.
- Option modules give you a choice of modules and are normally related to your subject area.
- Electives: are modules from across the either the whole University or your College. Such modules allow you to broaden your academic experience. For example, where electives are indicated, you may choose to commence the study of a foreign language alongside your course modules (and take this through to the final year), thereby adding further value to your degree.
- Additional information may also be included above each level, for example, where you must choose one of two specific modules.

Course management

Course Leader: Responsible for day to day running and overall management of the course and development of the curriculum;

Senior Tutor: Coordinates personalised support and provides additional academic support and referrals to other support services in the University (including the Counselling and Mental Health Service)

Head of School: Holds overall responsibility for all courses run by the School of Social Sciences

Academic regulations

The current Handbook of Academic Regulations is available at westminster.ac.uk/academic-regulations.

Course specific regulations apply to some courses.

Academic Support

Upon arrival, an induction programme will introduce you to the staff responsible for the course, the campus on which you will be studying, the Library and IT facilities and additional support available. You will be provided with a Course Handbook, which provides detailed information about the course. Each course has a course leader or equivalent. All students enrolled on a full-time course and part-time students registered for more than 60 credits a year have a personal tutor, who provides advice and guidance on academic matters. The University utilises a Virtual Learning Environment called Blackboard, where students access their course materials and can communicate and collaborate with staff and other students. Further information on Blackboard can be found at <https://www.westminster.ac.uk/current-students/studies/your-student-journey/when-you-arrive/blackboard>

The Academic Learning Development Centre supports students in developing the skills required for higher education. In addition to online resources in Blackboard, students can also attend Study Skills workshops and schedule one-to-one appointments. Further information on the Academic Learning Development Centre can be found at westminster.ac.uk/academic-learning-development.

Learning support includes our libraries, each of which holds a collection of resources related to the subjects taught at that site. Students can search the entire library collection online through the Library Search service to find and reserve printed books, and access electronic resources (databases, e-journals, e-books). Students can choose to study in the libraries, which have areas for silent and group study, desktop computers, laptops for loan, photocopying and printing services.

Support Services

The University of Westminster's Student and Academic Services department provides a range of advice and guidance. Further information on the advice available to students can be found at <https://www.westminster.ac.uk/student-advice>

The University of Westminster Students' Union also provides a range of facilities to support students during their time at the University. Further information on UWSU can be found at <https://www.westminster.ac.uk/students-union>

How do we ensure the quality of our courses and continuous improvement?

The course was initially approved by a University Validation Panel. University Panels normally include internal peers from the University, academic(s) from another university, a representative from industry and a Student Advisor.

The course is also monitored annually by the College to ensure it is running effectively and that any issues that might affect the student experience have been appropriately addressed. Staff will consider evidence from various sources, including student surveys, student progression and achievement, and reports from external examiners, to evaluate the effectiveness of the course and make necessary changes.

Periodic reviews are also conducted to ensure that the curriculum remains up-to-date and that the skills acquired on the course continue to be relevant to employers. Representative students meet with a panel to provide feedback on their experiences. Student feedback from previous years is also part of the evidence used to assess the course's performance.

How do we act on student feedback?

Student feedback is important to the University, and student views are taken seriously. Student feedback is collected in various ways.

- Through student engagement activities at the course and module level, students have the opportunity to express their voice in the running of their course. Course representatives are elected to expressly represent the views of their peers. The University and the Students' Union work together to provide a full induction to the role of the course representatives.
- There are also School Representatives appointed jointly by the University and the Students' Union who meet with senior School staff to discuss wider issues affecting student experience across the School. Student representatives are also represented on key College and University committees.;
- All students are invited to complete a questionnaire for each module. The feedback from this will inform the module leader on the effectiveness of the module and highlight areas that could be improved.
- Final-year undergraduate students will be asked to complete the National Student Survey, which helps inform the national university league tables. Postgraduate students will be asked to complete the Postgraduate Taught Survey (PTES).

This programme specification provides a concise summary of the main features of the course and the learning outcomes that a student may reasonably be expected to achieve and demonstrate if they take full advantage of the learning opportunities provided.
